Bible Temperance Heroes.

What says the Bible upon the temperance question? It speaks in bold words against the use of wine, and teaches by the lives of noted abstainers that stimulants are not necessary, that without them labor can be arduous and prolonged. The men of brain force and mental vigor never tasted wine. Let us borrow the wand of the witch of Endor, and call up Samuel. Can we find a nobler specimen of a man, or one that lived more intensely than he? He is an historian, writing down these sacred records when literature was yet young. He is the statesman who could either crown kings or chide them. He was the saint who kept near to God as his right arm. He was the prophet through whose lips of fire God spoke. But Samuel kept his garments all unspotted from the sin of Noah and Lot. He tasted neither wine nor strong drink. He touched not the fruit of the vine even in its harmless unfermented state. Or let us call up Samson. The muscles of his brawny arm are like cords of steel. How he plays with the Philistines, carrying away their city gates upon his shoulder, and pulling down the temple of their god! Even the jawbone of an ass, with his right hand clapping it, becomes a scythe of steel, leaving its bloody swath behind it. But Samson was a total abstainer. No particle of his giant strength was drawn from the fruit of the vine.

Or let us call up Elijah, the stern hermit of the old dispensation, that champion of a forsaken faith. In one short day he builds his altar upon Carmel, challenging the priests of Baal to an ordeal of fire, and then at evening, when the strength of others is spent, he girds up his loins and runs before the royal chariot to Jezebel. And Elijah was an abstainer. So too was Daniel, who suffered no harm from refusing the royal wine. His face was fairer, rounder, and purer than the faces of the Babylonian youths who had not, as he, the courage to say No.

Or let us make way for the rough Baptist, as he comes from the desert. With what tremendous energy he wrought and spoke! What thunders were in his tones, when the mere echoes of his voice shook the royal palace and made Herod tremble in his purple. But John was an abstainer. From his birth until his sharp death he did not know the taste of wine.—Rev. Henry Burton.

Why an Independent will This Year Vote for McKinley.

NO. II.

The want of space prevented my saying all I desired in my article last week. TRUSTS is claimed by Mr. Bryan to be an issue,—Democrats opposed, and Republicans in favor of them. This way of putting it seems to me unfair and demagogical. The evil of trusts is not exaggerated by any one. They have the people by the throat, and unless their hold can be broken soon—the people will either be their crouching slaves or be driven into rebellion against the government. Both parties claim to be against them, and hunting for a remedy. Democrats and Republicans alike are in them. Criminals are not confined to either party. Neither party, in my opinion, has a right to accuse the other of upholding Trusts, contrary to their platform of principles as announced by each party in convention. It is not a party question, any more than crime is a party question. All honest men, in every party, are against crimes; and Trusts, as operated to unfairly raise the prices of necessary commodities, are criminal. Let the people of all parties rise against them, and they will go down. To make Trusts a party question tends to call out the party spirit to uphold them. This is the way to wrong the people, and strengthen and encourage Trusts. The salvation of liberty in this country depends upon the independent people who cannot be led by party cry and party demagogues. Both parties have them in plenty.

Mr. Bryan talks much of Militarism. He thinks Mr. McKinley would like a larger army than the necessities of the country require, in order to tyrannize or menace the liberties of the people. He thinks an army of one hundred thousand men too large for this country, as we have got along in time of peace with twenty-five thousand, before this administration. During this administration we have acquired some two thousand islands, comprising territory equal to perhaps five states as large as Pennsylvania, mostly far away from our shores. Is it reasonable to expect the little army of 25,000 men, that just garrisoned our home forts, will be sufficient to keep order and secure civil government in all these additions to our country, even in time of peace? But we are at war with a people of 1,500,000 population, scattered over very extensive territory and situated on the opposite side of the earth. When the army was fixed at 25,000 we were at peace, and had a population of 40,000,000. Now we are at war, and have a population of 75,000,000 here at home. I think 100,000 men insufficient under our changed conditions. Are one hundred thousand men a menace to the liberties of this country,—this army composed of men quite as patriotic as any of us? Such an army could not take and hold New York City against its people. Instead of complaining about the large size of our army, Mr. Bryan would have made a far better point against the administration had he complained of its smallness, and in consequence the inevitable prostration of the war. Had we sent one hundred thousand men to the Philippines at once, the war would have been over long ago. We shall need them to garrison our numerous islands and keep order until a stable civilized government can be established there.

Mr. Bryan was not averse to entering the military service under McKinley. He bears the title of Colonel, by commission from the President. He did his best to get into the fight, and it seems to me he ought not to complain of the administration for its militarism. We are now a world power, and must have a larger army than when we were small and confined in territory and largely in influence to this continent. Let us be reasonable, and not confine the influence of our principles and institutions, but let the world have the benefit of them as far as it is in our power to give them without injury to ourselves.

Is it best to change generals while in the fight, especially when the one who would like to be substituted for the one we have, advises us to give up the fight to the enemy? Lincoln said, when running for the Presidency the second time, that "it was a bad time to swap horses while crossing a stream."

Let us keep the flag where it has gone, and correct the mistakes and cure the plumes on the face of the present administration as time will permit.
A. J. KING.

Republican Meeting.

Union Hall was filled with an enthusiastic audience, Monday evening, at the first meeting of the campaign. An orchestra of eight instruments helped to make the occasion enjoyable. Thos. C. Elvine, member of the County Committee, presided.

Lewis P. Scott, nominee for County Clerk, was first introduced, and spoke for five minutes. He doesn't claim to be a public speaker, but he certainly is a model County Clerk, and all who have business in his office are satisfied to have him there for five years more.

Hon. John J. Gardner came next, and entertained the audience for three-quarters of an hour. It was the best speech ever heard from him, full of wit and wisdom and pat illustrations.

As a member of Congress, he knows Mr. Bryan and related several incidents indicating his utter unfitness for the Presidency. There was solid argument also, showing the necessity for re-electing Mr. McKinley.

Col. C. H. Denison, of New York, was introduced, and spoke nearly an hour and a-half. He is an able speaker—know what seemed necessary to say, and said it well. His text was, "Let us forget," and he reminded his hearers of many political mistakes this country has made, and the sad consequences thereof. He occupied much time in clearing away misconceptions concerning imperialism, trusts, silver, etc. It was one of the most instructive political addresses we ever listened to, and made a very favorable impression.

If evil come not, then our fears are vain; and if they come, fear but augments the pain. Too many people sing "Scatter sunshine," and wait for somebody else to do it. Doing is an antidote for doubting.

Stood Death Off. E. B. Munday, a lawyer of Henrietta, Tex., once fooled a grave-digger. He says: "My brother was very low with malarial fever and jaundice. I persuaded him to try Electric Bitters, and he was soon much better, but continued their use until entirely cured. I am sure Electric Bitters saved his life." This remedy expels malarin, kills disease germs and purifies the blood; aids digestion, regulates liver, kidneys, and bowels, cures constipation, dyspepsia, nervous diseases, kidney troubles, and female complaints; gives perfect health. Only 50 cts., at Crowell's.
