Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Simpson, of Atlantic City, are rejoicing over a little son, born on Wednesday, Oct. 25th. Mrs. S. was formerly Miss Florence Bakely, of Hammonton.

A pleasant letter was received this week from J. Fred. Vial, a former Republican office attache. He has recently recovered from an operation for appendicitis.

Jeweler Livengood has bought Mrs. Plenty's house, on Horton Street, formerly owned by Robert Steel. Mrs. Livengood and little child arrived on Thursday evening.

John Zinn, for eleven years in the employ of Jackson & Son, has accepted a similar position in Camden. He is an expert in his line, and will be missed by patrons of the market.

The regular monthly meetings of the Hammonton and the Workingmen's Loan and Building Association will be held hereafter in The Peoples Bank building, instead of in Firemen's Hall, as heretofore. Shareholders are requested to note the change, and pay their dues, etc., at the bank. Next meetings: Hammonton on Thursday, Nov. 2nd; Workingmen's on Monday, Nov. 6th. Doors will be open at seven o'clock p. m.

Obituary.

Rhina, wife of William O. Hoyt, Junior Editor of the Republican, daughter of Edwin Jones, died on Saturday morning, October 21st, 1916, at her home on Maple Street, Hammonton, N. J., aged forty years, after but a few days illness, of cerebral hemorrhage. Funeral services were held in the Baptist Church at two o'clock on Tuesday, conducted by her pastor, Rev. W. J. Casworth. The attendance was large, the floral offerings numerous and beautiful, the music and address exceedingly tender and touching, soothing to the mourning relatives and friends present. Her husband has lost a faithful wife, their daughter a loving mother, the Church and the community a Christian woman, a beloved friend, dear to all who knew her.

Pension day, next Saturday. The beneficiaries of Uncle Sam's distribution are becoming rapidly less in number. Scarcely one of them is under seventy years of age, and many are much older.

A progressive euchre will be held at the Raleigh-in-the-Pines next Wednesday, at 8 p.m. Proceeds to be devoted to the War Relief Department of the Needlework Guild of America. Tickets 25 cts. Dancing to follow.

On Sunday morning, Nov. 5th, the pastor of All Souls' Church will summarize the "Moral Issues of the Political Campaign," as different speakers in the Sunday evening series have deduced them, in a sermon that will be preached on "Leadership in a Republic."

Town Council Meeting.

Regular convocation on Wednesday evening. Messrs. Nicolai, McIntyre and Tell absent; but Mr. Nicolai came later, and Mr. Pizzi was excused.

Manufacturers offer five cents per foot for worn-out hose, if couplers are attached. The couplers alone are worth that amount.

License Committee reported favorably, and a pool-room license granted to Fred Casario, in Ben. Foglietto's building.

Bills ordered paid:

Town Purposes	$30.49
Forest Fire	21.85
Highways	352.26
Drainage	14.59
Sewerage	28.04

Mr. Jannett offered to line the tank at disposal plant with four inches of cement for $65. Ordered done.

A lodge of "Sons of Italy" is to be organized here, and Council was asked to allow Columbus Band to play at certain hours on Sunday, Nov. 26th, to meet delegations at railroad stations. Referred to Law and Order Committee.

Resolution adopted, authorizing Treasurer to borrow money to pay interest due Nov. 1st,—the loan to be repaid from taxes received.

Two special police were ordered for the 31st, and two for evening.

Adjourned at 9.17, to meet next Monday evening.

Hallowe'en Celebration.

Here is a list of prizes offered to contestants in the big parade next Tuesday night:

THE GREATER PRIZE

It was finished. The book upon which he had been so strenuously engaged, working almost night and day for several months past, was completed.

For the last fortnight he had written with almost feverish haste to his anxiety to get the work out of hand, for of late his health had shown unmistakable signs of breaking down. He was still old-fashioned enough to do all his own writing, and as he collected the last loose sheets together a great sigh of relief escaped him.

Success had come early to Dudley Hamilton, but he knew that this, his latest work, would only go to enhance his reputation.

Already he had some half-dozen extremely successful novels to his credit, besides a number of others which had not gained any great notoriety, but in "The Conqueror's Flame" he had given of his very best, and he looked with confidence to the book creating a big sensation—may, more, being hailed as his crowning achievement as a writer.

For had it not been written with purpose, and had he not in its pages laid bare his very soul?

But, in spite of the name he had made as an author—a name that was a household word throughout two continents—Dudley Hamilton was not a happy man.

He was rich beyond what his fondest dreams had once been; he was famous, too. But in the winning of that fame he had placed his life before him, and had neglected and scorned the woman he had vowed at the altar to love and cherish.

Three years before the climax had been reached, when, after one of his blind fits of passion, she had told him of her decision to no longer persevere in a hindrance to him, and they had parted to go their respective ways.

In the pursuit of that name upon which he was so intent, he had hurriedly missed her at first, and he told himself the flame of love had completely died out so far as he was concerned.

Then came the day, so quiet and so had departed, when he awoke one morning to find himself famous, and though he experienced a thrill of pride that he had succeeded in doing what he set out to accomplish—that the dream of his life had been realized—there was no real joy in his heart.

Afterwards came the awakening. For the first time he missed her, and as the weeks lengthened into months and the months into one year, and then two, the yearning grew stronger within him to have her back and hold her once again in his arms.

He had been happy when they were comparatively poor, and might have been so even now but for the ambition which had come between them.

Since she had left him he had not heard a word about her. She had disappeared and passed out of his life completely.

When two years had slipped away, and he began to realize, like Solomon of old, that all in vanity, and that his happiness lay in having her back again, he commenced to search, and spent both time and a considerable sum of money in the endeavor to trace her whereabouts.

He could not say, would not bring himself to believe she was dead. But all his efforts to find her had proved fruitless, and so time went on he realized how very much he really wanted her.

Then came an inspiration. He would write another book, which should be a powerful appeal—a cry from his heart—for her to return to him.

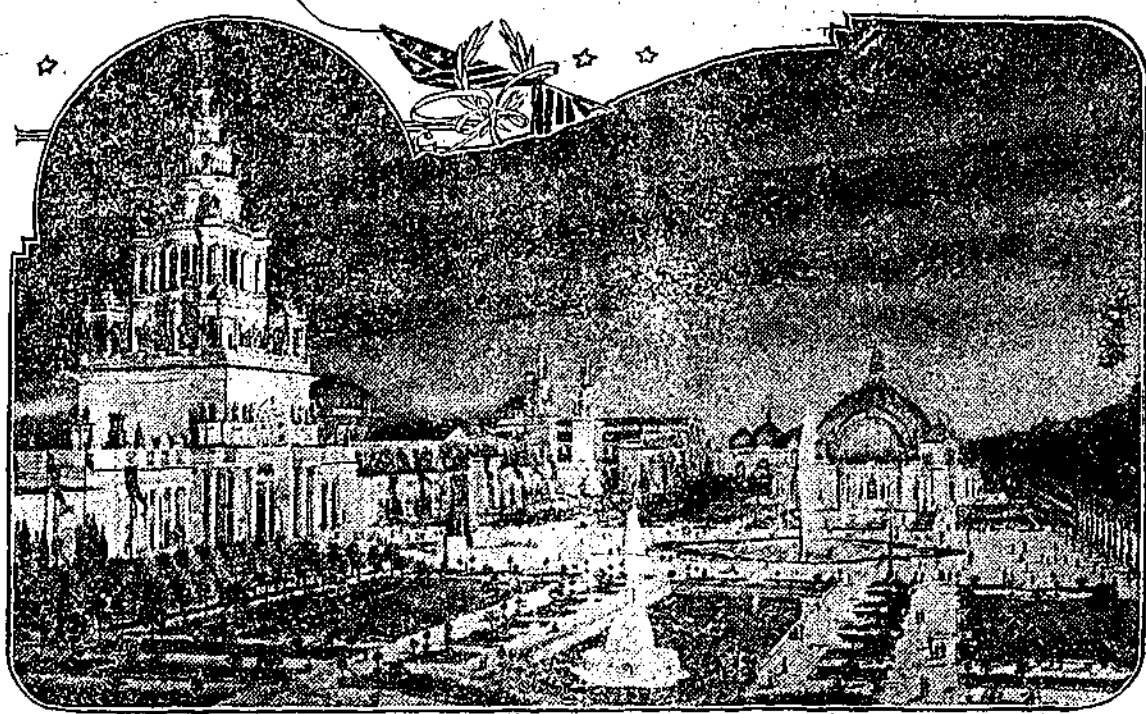

In it he would tell her that his love had not died; how much he needed her; that she was indeed necessary to his happiness.

He would tell her that his love had not died; how much he needed her; that she was indeed necessary to his happiness.

He would tell her that his love had not died; how much he needed her; that she was indeed necessary to his happiness.

He would tell her that his love had not died; how much he needed her; that she was indeed necessary to his happiness.

VAST SOUTH GARDENS OF THE MARVEL EXPOSITION CITY AT NIGHT.

Night view of South Gardens and main entrance to the Panama-Pacific International Exposition at San Francisco in 1915. Dominating the scene at the left of the picture is the Tower of Jewels, rising some 455 feet into the air. Its architectural lines marked with thousands of glittering hand-polished crystals of many colors and its whole surface softly glowing with the reflected light from the areas which are hidden from the spectator. Further down the facade, at about the center of the picture, may be seen the two slender towers which guard the entrance to the Court of Palms and directly in front of the Tower of Jewels is A. Stirling Calder's "Fountain of Energy." In the background at the extreme left may be seen the top of the triumphal Arch of the Rising Sun, surmounted by the group "The Nations of the East."

Had he read the book before some where and forgotten it?

Hardly that, for he saw very few novels and read less. In fact, it took him all his time to write them.

Or was it simply a coincidence after all that his Christian name had been used, and that the writer, who ever he was, had made use of incidents so closely connected with his own career?

The book was clever, undoubtedly, clever and powerful, the most powerful novel he had read for many a long day. Who could the writer be? So far he had not troubled to look at the title, but now he feverishly turned to the front page.

"Ah!" An exclamation of surprise burst from his lips as he read: "DISENCHANTMENT."

By Rev. Wade. He breathed hard. So this was the book by the new star with the fame more into society. Indulge in a little of London—say, the whole country—was ringing—the work of his rival, which had robbed him of his premier position as the novelist of the country.

This was the work the critics, with out exception, had praised sky-high, and compared with which his own novel, "The Conqueror's Flame," sank into insignificance.

As he stared at the title page he felt him be again asked himself the question, "Who was the author?"

"Rev. Wade—Kew Wade," he murmured. "The sound seems familiar, and he had been recognized as the author of that name. It must be a man of plume, of course, but whose identity does it suggest?"

He lay back in the chair, and ran over in his mind all the likely authors he knew, or who knew him, for he was a little slowly averting eyes, and he almost reached breaking-point, and he wondered whether or not the woman he now realized he loved better than even his life itself, would come in time.

"Why had he not written the thing himself?"

Every incident seemed thoroughly familiar to him, and yet he had not realized the possibilities of the material.

Who could it be? "Ah!" A further exclamation had escaped him. There was a dedication, and as he gazed at the words he felt that he had suddenly.

To D. H. It was his own initials again. Not a fictitious personage, this time. Like the Dudley Horne of the story. The incidents, the dedication, the characters, his own favorite expression, all pointed to one thing. Some one had written that book who knew him intimately, and the dedication must be intended for him.

Who could the author possibly be? Young Dick Atterly, perhaps. He knew his story well enough, and so he, Dudley Hamilton, had helped him at the outset of his career, perhaps. But wasn't it queer that Dick had not written to him?

Dick Atterly was such an odd fellow, though, and probably he wished to keep the authorship secret for some reason. Having thus explained matters, Dick Hamilton turned to the book again and read on quite oblivious of time or place.

He did not pretend to read each page thoroughly. He simply glanced over and there, instinctively dropping on the main points of the story, as he found it to be what he needed. He was not a man, but a woman. He felt strangely attracted. Could it be?

THE PINE AND THE ELM.

By Arthur Gulterman.

The Pine Tree spoke in the fall of the year. To the Elm by the orchard wall: "Your leaves are dropping, wrinkled and sear."

You soon will have lost them all! "But see! how green my needles show! And all the winter through I hold them fast; for I'd have you know That I'm not feeble, like you!"

"You change your leaves, but I keep mine, And pools call me 'The Constant Pine!'"

But the Elm Tree laughed as he answered, "Nay, You never shall hear me mourn My dead leaves, fluttering, pushed away By fresh young buds, newborn!"

"For leaves should be to bush and tree As thoughts to humankind; So a tree must change its leaves, you see, As a man must change his mind."

"Yes, it's true,—though to you it may seem strange,— That leaves and notions ought to change!"

PINK CARNATION SOCIAL.

When is J. G. going to work? Does he intend waiting for the rope works to start up?

Does J. B. intend wearing one of those suit hats that are so much in vogue by the boys?

There are a number of persons who would like to know where R. L. got the girl he took to the picnic.

Even if M. B. and L. H. do not know how to make lemonade, they can cut bread.

In the fellow who came around the corner with a buzz saw hat and a new suit trying to make a bit with H. D. again?

G. B. doubts that he eloped with A. C. H. should certainly know all about it.

J. B. and M. G. seem to be dissatisfied with those felt hats.

Will C. M. be able to keep the lunch under control like he did last year?

The boys are wondering where S. S. will get the necessary to go on the picnic.

M. B., J. H. and N. D. are given credit for being so attentive at the meetings.

Does P. B. intend taking a girl to the picnic this year?

Why was it that M. G. and D. L. did not go out on the picnic last Sunday? Did someone get wise?

Years ago Mr. Isidore de Lara used to sing his own songs at concerts to his own accompaniment. The most popular of them was "The Garden of Sleep."

Once—no runs the story—Mr. de Lara was "Garden of Sleep" at a private house, and he was immensely annoyed by Mr. George Moore, who went on insistently talking after the song had begun.

Mr. de Lara said, "Then spring indignantly to his feet."

"Mr. Moore," he said, "I was singing of other days before the Prince of Wales, and he spoke—and I stopped."

"Well, my dear chap," replied Mr. Moore, calmly, "he survived!"

Amazing Feats Are Easy With HUDSON SUPER-SIX

No Evident Effort -- No Sign of Wear In Doing What No Other Car Has Done

Things the Super-Six does are less important than the way it does them. In breaking world's records it has hardly shown an effort. And after 7000 record-breaking miles, a Super-Six motor showed no evidence of wear in any part or bearing.

The Hudson Super-Six, in most cities, has broken all local records. Most of you have seen them broken. It has elsewhere broken all world mile records which have any bearing on stock cars. But all these wondrous things are done without a sign of effort.

Most stock motors go to pieces in attempting speedway tests. Also if hill-climbing feats. They never arrive at all.

But most of our stock car records were won with a single Super-Six. It made a speed record exceeding 100 miles per hour. It broke all touring car speed records up to 100 miles. It ran 480 miles in 24 hours, exceeding the record by 52 per cent.

Yet that Super-Six motor, after 3500 miles of that terrific strain, showed no wear whatever. The motor's condition was to exports almost unbelievable.

Another Super-Six broke the ocean-to-ocean record solely because of endurance. It ran from San Francisco to New York in 5 days, 3 hours and 31 minutes. Then the same 7-passenger Super-Six turned around and went back to San Francisco. The round trip was made in 10 days, 21 hours, 3 minutes. It was the first car to ever finish in a coast to coast and return trip against time.

Last Spring, the best one-way time made by a famous eight was 7 days, 11 hours, 52 minutes. In 24 days more the Super-Six made the round trip. No test of endurance has ever equalled that.

That's what you want

That's why men buy the Super-Six—men wise in motor cars. Not for excessive speed or power, but to render every-day performance without vibration, wear or effort.

The Super-Six at half capacity can match another car's speed record. That means a long-lived motor, low upkeep, small repairs.

whitely, to a casual observer, might seem too trivial to bother with. But the Lehto's room is the cozy home, for instance, of three in a trapdoor dog which is given the nickname of "Lion" because "you will hear him devouring or coughing loudly when he is hungry." And you will be drawn up in front of this "captor of interest," or it may be at right angles to it, to look at the couch with a table top, with a good resulting light, or even two of the table legs. And the couch is a trapdoor chair. A friendlier chair, designed by the risk of the fire. If the table is not used, the couch is a trapdoor and trapdoor prohibitive, and it is each time to place itself, first to escape door, little table, called misadventure, just as back as the second danger, in the wide end of metal coffee, making

These are placed, one at each end of davenport, or, only one may be used. Each is large enough to hold a large book, a flower-stand, an ash tray.

But for the Small Room.
IF YOUR living-room is small, davenporting is much too big; you may have in its stead a long, comfortable cushioned seat, a small kidney table (so shaped) at one end and a floor lamp in the center of interest; for, be it said, the tea table is very much to the fore. Then in another corner, for the room takes advantage of its corner, we find a big chair with a footstool, perhaps at the side and adjustable.

3. MAKING GOOD IMPRESSIONS

Life, as has been often said, is art. To become superior in using the social position, knowledge and temperament, to act properly, one influences with the maximum, first, the increasing aspect in the social position, then in the knowledge, then in the temperament, then in the playing, it takes study and practice.

If "conscience matter" only as in the motto "conscience makes man born great, but it is real trading."

If most of our success comes from proper meeting people.

If most of our success comes through business deals, to gain a particular venture, to attain a social position, to gain a particular knowledge, to gain a particular money, know how to make our money count.

In other words, how can I get the most favorable impression?

First, as the perception of it, to conceal art, so to make the advantages that confer you the reason to be trying. If any gains the idea that you are seeking, impress him, you become an actor, you need just the idea, in his eyes.

Second, to gain the confidence, confidence and self-esteem.

If you are to most gain the impression, you must be in a good position, such as the President of the United States.

I believe I have said that I am myself any member of a labor union believe first of all in the rights of all of the people, and secondly in the rights of the people of the whole United States.

In the case of the settlement of the anthracite coal strike, I have said of precisely the kind we identify Wilson now says the labor movement is obliging in all similar cases. But I have said that I do not admit that his own action was such that it ought never to be repeated. I am assured that the House of Congress has adjourned without anything, it is his intention to grow meek to see that his action is not repeated. I wonder whether the President ever in respect of what he has just done, to open the door and state that he has done proper action, constituting a precedent for future action. I am myself convinced that what was wrong and that the thereby set is so evil that it and who also cleared the way for the present scheme everybody can see successful. I might mention that the fight was not up to the courts at all, it was up to the people. I am sure that all disputes of Mr. Wilson, on the one hand, and the people, on the other, never have been so different of different points of view as in the other. I noted there through the investigation that the establishment of a trust created a great crisis in the administration. Mr. Wilson, the president of the railroad service, and relation to that service, and the people of the industry being just as able to make them to the capital invested in the service. I am sure that the trust to say that this ideal should be made by the proper consideration of the full facts of the situation. I have to consider the different classes of interest on the investment of the service that must be public. It is impossible to see that all these factors are Mr. Wilson absolutely deny any of them. He denies that the present moment one particular information which is the basis of the present men were just or not directly understood that to pass judgment on it.

It is not exercised in the manner which would bring justice to all the parties to these questions. When some third person is put before the competent body, the justice that is pursued as regards the operation has to be put aside. It should be that a union shall 11 have the right to be consulted, but should be enacted with the view of securing the necessary.

Only a War Prosperity.

At the first eighteen months of administration the national business to pieces, the slidings on the part of the Government, the poverty the number of unemployed in the great industry grew to appalling proportions. I saw the streets of New York I know; for less than two to I had to take an active part in New York measures to relieve the suffering. The streets and tenement houses crowded to overflowing with people destitute of working clothes, and who had no money to pay for street lodging or the cheapest food. The unemployed were numbered by the thousands, but the thousands; and I was in accordance with men and women of other cities. In Philadelphia, where the conditions as bad as in New York. Every man, woman and child had to be taken care of by the public authorities and by the public aid, in order to care for the mul-tion, its suffering from the effects of the year 1861, and it was in 1861, and we would not have been able to do so in 1861, at least as had an any ever known in our history.

 It was in 1861, and it was with the war conditions commenced. It will then be difficult to see how we could have been in better in this, and our difficulties be prolonged and our own Government from Me."

THE GOSSIP CURE.

If you must voice the scandal light
Of one who dwelleth near you
Just whisper it to some deaf wit
Who really cannot hear you.
Or croon it to a telephone
With all due circumspection
When you're in the booth alone.
And no one in confabion.
Or, best of all, go tell the bit
That doth so much allure you
To him who is the butt of it—
Lazzy that will cure you.
