MOODS.

"A burnt child dreads the fire" is an old saying, but "moths fly into the candle" is as old. Both are true of men and nations as well as of children and moths. We have our moods—sometimes wise, sometimes otherwise. Some days we gladly learn from experience, on others we refuse its lessons. We must judge a man not by the passing mood of an hour, but by the general tenor and trend of his life. This is true also of nations. Judge France by its John Law bubble of the last century, and we might think the nation made up of blind and crazy fools, but look at France for a hundred years and it has come up from the Bourbons to the Republic, and its people have made large gains.

In our country we see the same varied moods well illustrated in our course in regard to protection and free-trade. In 1787 we started with protection—a Constitution empowering Congress to legislate for it, an act of the First Congress establishing it, the views and actions of the great men most-beloved and trusted upholding it. Prosperity followed, but in a few years came a strange change of mood. The Democracy won power, and in 1816 customs duties were reduced. Then came depression and distress, the people saw their mistake and learned a lesson from it. In 1824 duties on imports were made protective and our "greatest prosperity" came, so said Henry Clay.

But the mood changed in 1833. The slave power laid its strong hand on the Democracy, demagogues did their work for free-trade, and the fearful panic of 1837 wrought ruin.

This severe lesson was heeded, and in 1842 came protection under Whig rule.

James K. Polk, a Democratic President, stated its result in his annual message as "prosperity without an example," but that party, under the lash of the slave power, like the negro fearing the slave whip of the overseer, brought us free-trade or revenue tariff in 1846, which lasted until the days of James Buchanan, when the Government was compelled to pay 8 to 12 per cent. interest for a few millions to keep its affairs in motion.

Then came a great uprising, and opening of blind eyes, a learning from experience, a wiser and higher mood. War was forced on us by the South, the Confederacy died, slavery and free-trade, its cornerstones, were broken in pieces, and freedom and protection came instead, and with them a Union more real, a prosperity more wonderful than we ever before enjoyed.

Now comes another mood; the same blindness, the same disregard for the lessons of experience, the same restless and unreasoning wish for change, the solid South ruling the Democracy, as did the old slave power, and free-trade confronting us like a black cloud, big with the destructive tornado.

Look at our nation for a century, and we see that while its moods have varied, yet, on the whole, wisdom has gained and we have made marked and cheering progress. The lesson is one of faith and hope, and strength for needed work.

The nation's experience, and the experience of the civilized world, show the benefits of protection and the perils of free-trade. We can each and all, work and wait for a higher mood—a change that shall sweep away free-trade as by the rush of a mighty wind. It will come.—American Economist.

The trouble at Homestead, Pa., has been complicated by the arrest of a man who had been employed by the Company as cook for the non-union men in their employ. It is stated that the cook was bribed to drug the coffee made for the men, that a large number were made sick, and several died. The dose was given daily, hoping to discourage the men and drive them away. Some of the strikers will have to answer this serious charge.

There's another strike among the glass-workers at Millville, and over one thousand people will be thrown out of work by to-night.

At a recent sale at the capital, a pair of George Washington's old pants sold for $840. Free traders will tell you that the high price paid was due to the wicked Republican duty on wool.

A FAMILY PAPER

WHICH IS

Clean, Unsensational,

and Just the Paper

FOR THE American Home!

The Press has the best possible organization to secure news from the most important sources, and with nearly 400 correspondents in Pennsylvania, New Jersey, and Delaware, the State and local news is covered with a routine carefulness and attention to detail not even attempted by any other paper.

The Press has also the best of correspondents in all the great cities of the United States, as well as financial and railroad experts in Chicago and the West, who keep the paper more than abreast of the times.

The columns of the Sunday Press are enriched by contributions from those whose names are written high in our list of great authors, novelists, essayists, as well as from men of high rank in public life. The best authors know that their best audiences are the readers of the Daily, Sunday, and Weekly Press.

In politics, the Press knows no other master than the people, and the past year has seen, as has been seen before, the marked fact that it is subservient to no political boss. It has no political ambitions to foster, but looks after the interests of its readers, and delivers itself upon the issues of the day in a manner both frank and fearless, letting the facts speak for themselves and evading no issue, but meeting them all on the basis of fair play to all men at all times. Its pages know no distinctions, and the rights of one class over another are not recognized nor supported.

The Republican.
(Entered as second class matter.)
SATURDAY, DEC. 17, 1892.

Senator Chandler, who has been giving careful study to the problem, recommends that all immigration, except from North and South American countries, shall be suspended for a year from the first of next March. One of his strong reasons for proposing such a law is, if possible, to keep cholera out of the United States. His proposition should lead to early and decided action. All wish the success of the Columbian Exposition at Chicago, and the cholera would be its ruin. All wish, still more earnestly, the preservation of the people from pestilence. On the pressing need and importance of restricting immigration, to keep back the tide of incompetence and pauperism and crime, there is a strong and growing feeling.

"Tariff reformers" talk as though the McKinley tariff was the extreme of "high protection." It gives us the largest free list we have had for a half century, so that 20.3 per cent. of our total importations are now free. It reduces some rates, leaves others untouched, and raises others where such change was needed. Its average rate on all importations was 21 1/2 per cent. for the last fiscal year—lower than under any tariff for 35 years, and less than was the average rate planned for under the Mills bill. Judged by the free-trade statement that a tariff is a tax, it is better than the Mills bill could have been. It has greatly helped us in higher wages, more employ and greater commerce at home and abroad. If it goes, what next? Where are the brains, the experience and the unity of aim and plan among the Democracy to frame a tariff bill fit to be a law? Judging the future by the past—looking back at the dismal failures of Morrison and Wood and Mills—we may say, "Echo answers, Where?" But let us wait and see.

PAINT! PAINT!
—THE—HAMMONONTON.

When you buy the Hammononton Paint, you do not buy seven-eighths of a gallon for a gallon, or three pints for a half gallon; nor do you get one of those packages that weigh 12 to 14 pounds, and containing so much alkali that it appears to be so thick that it is impossible to use it without thinning; but in buying the Hammononton you get a full standard gallon of paint, weighing 14 to 16 pounds to the gallon, made from the best materials known to the trade, and costs the consumer from $1 to $1.50 per gallon for honest paint.

If the purchaser doesn't want honest paint, and wants to be honest to himself, then be sure to buy the Hammononton Paint, and the manufacturer will give a receipt with every gallon sold telling you how to make two gallons of paint out of one of the Hammononton. It will cost 33 cents for the extra gallon.

One Dollar.
And then have come Commercial Paint, in 30 shades,—the best wearing paint ever put on the market for so low a price as $1 per gallon, and guaranteed to be a first-class wearing paint. If any one should not want to pay so high a price for a good exterior paint, then work the 88 cent racket, and get two gallons for $1.33. Manufactured at Hammononton Paint Works.
