Trust Company's Reception.

The Hammonton Trust Company issued invitations for the people of the town and vicinity to visit their Banking Rooms on Wednesday, Dec. 16th, to inspect the business facilities which had been provided and the modern safety devices which they had installed.

The courteous invitation was generally accepted, and unstinted praise bestowed upon the officers and directors for their taste, their energy, and their business foresight. In the banking room proper, the counters are of handsome chestnut, conveniently constructed for both patrons and officials. Type-writer, computing machine, telephones, and all needed facilities seem to be well located. The vault is of generous dimensions, and contains one of the latest and most complete cash safes in the market, and a large cabinet of boxes, for rent. The entrance is guarded by heavy doors, with time-locks and everything that inventive genius has yet devised to prevent unauthorized entrance. The vault itself is of steel, railroad-rails, heavily covered and filled with cement. The Directors' room is easy of access, and well furnished.

In the second story are two fine rooms, the rear one leased to the Prudential Insurance Company. The front room may be retained by the company for social and other uses. On Wednesday it was the scene of unusual festivity. Tables were loaded with good things to eat, including all manner of fruits, while "fruit punch" containing no "stick," and hot coffee were provided for all who would accept.

And the ladies! There were many of them, wives and daughters of the managers, mostly, and they demonstrated the real spirit of hospitality to rich and poor. The officials considered themselves a reception committee, and welcomed us each, escorted all who would, and explained everything to the uninitiated.

All in all, it was a most successful reception; and it is no disloyalty to our old reliable Peoples Bank to wish the new institution a healthy growth and continuous prosperity.

Christmas at St. Mark's.

Holy Communion at 6.30, 7.30, and 8.30 a. m.

Sunday after Christmas:

Holy Communion at 7.30 a. m. Holy Communion and Sermon, 10.30. Sunday School, 11.45. Evening Prayer and Sermon at 7.30.

The Sunday School will have its Christmas treat on Monday, Dec. 28th, in the Parish House.

On Tuesday last, application was made, in Philadelphia, for a marriage license, in the names of Dr. Arthur Krout and Mrs. Mary Ryland Hay. The lady claims to be the widow of Adelbert, son of the late John Hay, Secretary of State; but she has lost her marriage certificate, and the minister who, according to her story, performed the ceremony in Atlantic City in 1900 doubts it, says he married no one at that time. Further, records show that Adelbert Hay was in South Africa at that time. Arthur, whom many of us remember, believes his lady's story, notwithstanding the lack of corroboration. Evidently it was a case of deception; some stranger represented himself as young Mr. Hay.

Sheriff Enoch Johnson empanelled his first petit jury this week; and it is noteworthy that Atlantic City has not its usual preponderance of members—in fact, has very few in the list. This may be left by the liquor and gambling element in that city. Hammonton's representatives will be A. B. Davis, John Rothius, P. L. Capella, and Manley Austin.

VOTE OF THANKS. The directors and officers of Hammonton Trust Company desire to thank the ladies who so kindly assisted at the Public Reception of the Company, Dec. 16, 1908.

"Father, can't you give Harold Stanley a situation in the bank as office boy?"

"Harold Stanley, a situation? Why, Harold, he's the son of one of the most prominent families in the city. Job Stanley, Harold's father, was never known to do a day's work in his life, and what does earn his family doesn't get by a long shot. I don't know how Harold could be trusted with any position. I don't know how Job Stanley's influence could be trustworthy."

"Your house is in a bad place, Louis," Harold said. "If the water should overflow, we shall have time to get to high ground before it surrounds us. I don't speak to father this morning about giving you a situation."

"Did he say that he would?" inquired Harold, eagerly.

"No, he didn't give me much encouragement. He said that it discouraged me. I intended to get him interested in you before I give up."

"Harold is not like his father."

"Give him time, Louie, and his inheritance is sure to show itself."

"You have no place for him, father."

"No, Louie; I dare not try the experiment, and, by-the-way, I should like it better if you had less to do with this stammer boy. I think that you can easily find better associates."

"You are right, father. I believe Harold to be honest and worthy."

This conversation took place between William Haworth and his son, Louie, one morning, as they were driving down town to the bank of which Mr.

Harold's heart sank. He had never doubted that his young friend would secure him the coveted position. Now all was over.

Louie saw the evidence of disappointment in Harold's face and he did all in his power to cheer the boy.

When they separated, Louie said:

"Keep up good spirit, Hal. I'm sure that you will get the position yet. I shall speak to him again about the matter in a few days."

"You are very kind, Louie," Harold replied, "but I presume that there are other boys that your father thinks are better fitted for such work than I am."

ture disposition.

In their early childhood days, when they became playmates on the grounds of the public school, Louis Harwood and Harold Stanley formed a strong liking for each other, and, as they advanced in years, the attachment strengthened, until they became like brothers.

The social conditions of the two families were widely different. Harold was the only child of a shabby, intemperate man, who cared but little for his family, and spent the greater portion of his time at the gaming shops of the city.

Harold's mother was a patient, industrious woman, who managed, through the exercise of careful economy, with her earnings and what assistance Harold could give her, to keep their family upon the level of respectability.

On the other hand, Louis Harwood was the youngest of five children, and the trails and so blocking the railroads that communication with the East, over the Northern route, was suspended for weeks.

When, at last, under the influence of the warm spring sun and the rain, the snow melted, the canyons became courses for turbulent streams and the rivers were greatly swollen.

The opportunity came the next morning, and, with surprise and sorrow, Louis heard his father's denunciation of his friend.

On the morning that the denunciation occurred, Louis was returning home with a heavy heart. He was not willing to give up the fight in behalf of Harold, and he did his best. In due season he was convincing his father of his friend's worthiness.

At the upper end of the street, near the outskirts of the town, Louis saw a knot of men who seemed to be deeply interested in something that a tall, heavy man, who stood in their midst, was saying.

As he drew near the crowd, he saw Harold, and he shouted to the boy to come and have a ride.

Harold came over to the carriage, and "What's the excitement?" Louis asked.

"The fellow that was talking to the miles from the San Joaquin River, a quarter of a mile from the western outskirts of the town and in the direction of the river, at a point where the land was high and yet lower than the elevation upon which the town had been built, stood the handsome residence of the family.

The grounds around it were extensive and beautiful, but over every acre of the place, a gloom had fallen. Mr. Harworth had chosen the spot as a place of residence a large number of the citizens of Upton, who were acquainted with the peculiarities of the river, had frequently expressed their doubt of the wisdom of the choice.

The banker laughed at their fears, and, although with two other men, he had shut his family off from the town, except by horse, except by means of a boat, he made no attempt to establish himself on higher ground.

The Daily Postcard.
The wife of the American minister at Tientsin recently asked Mr. Nelthorpe, the Russian president of the Peace Conference, to write something in her album.
His sentiment was couched with foliage:
"I am eager," he wrote, "to make peace with one enemy that forty-seven ventrals!"

Confident that no immediate danger threatened his family, Mr. Haworth went to the bank. Two hours later he was startled by cries on the street that the flood was coming. He rushed outside and joined the crowd that was hurrying toward the western out skirts.

It may well be he could gather from the excited people as he ran, he learned that the river had suddenly risen above its banks and the water was sweeping toward the town like a mill race.

For a moment he hesitated for the safety of his family, the banker hastened to a point from which he could see his residence. The sight that met his view rendered him frantic. The house had completely surrounded by water and had risen to the top of the

There was a sharp report, and a light shone from the window. They eagerly looked across the water. The river blossomed through the hand of a man, who hoistedly held it.

For a moment there was terrible suspense. Then a great shout went up from the people, when the banker's son was seen to reach out and pick up the cord.

The river was fastened to the end of the wire at strong rope, and Lewis drew it slowly across the water.

The current pulled at it strongly, and it was feared that the twine would break; but it proved strong enough for the purpose, and the rope was finally hauled upon the shore.

It was not long through the sculls in the roof, and made it fast to a slider between the rafters. A lumpy Boats were to be had, but to attempt to cross the racing waters in one of them would be useless, for twenty men could not have rowed for a boat against such a current. How to question the unfortunate ones was the question that agitated the minds of the people.

Whatever was done must be done quickly, for the water was steadily rising, and in a few minutes had risen to the eills of the windows, through which the occupants of the house were gazing.

Wild with fear, Mr. Haworth moved among the people, exhorting them to save his family. He offered a fortune to any man who would bring his wife and children to him, but there was no one there who could see a way of do-

"Despair was fast overcoming him, when it occurred to the boy that he had read of a way that the members of the life-saving stations have of saving the lives of shipwrecked sailors, by attaching a ball with a attached to it, to the end of a rope, and throwing the same ashore on it after it had been made fast at each end. And with this remembrance came an idea, and, waving his cap over his head, as if it were the courage of a lion, he sprang forward, and leaped through the excited crowd, and landed at the top of his speed toward

As Harold sped along the ball of wine unwound, and when he reached he crowed the cord was trailing behind him a long distance below the street.

"The appearance of the boy," said the man, "and the way he held the wine in his hand, attracted the attention of some of the men, who, fearing that the excitement had been too much for him, and that he might do some harm, caught him by the arms, and asked him what he intended to do.

Harold could tell them that he was not going to do anything, but the lead fish, which he was holding, was still attached to it, and he was in the power of the Haworth residence. If he would do it, and a strong rope was tied to the end of the cord, the imprisoned members of the banker's family could be rescued, fasten it, and, with a coat, a rope ferry could be made, and the endangered ones saved.

"In any case, there for the boy!" said the man, "and the boy was gone."

deceased men closely watched by those guarding the President. Foreigners with whiskers are closely watched by the secret service men who accompanied President Roosevelt. This was exemplified recently when the President was at Canton in attendance at the funeral of Mrs. McKinley. In all of the thousands assembled there, I saw but one secret service man. This individual was at all appearances a Russian, well-dressed, stockily-built and wearing an immense crop of brown whiskers. He was dressed in the uniform of a Russian and gave no indication of being an American. He stood before the President's train for hours. Not much attention was paid to him then, but it was recalled afterwards that the police had to tell him several times to get out of their way. At the time he was gathered with the crowd to keep in the front rank, up against the ropes, stolid, watchful, patient. Once he was seen to get around to a position where he could look into the crowd. It was noticed that he was looking at that had been seen every where throughout the crowds at some time or other during the few hours the crowd

That settled it.
The foreigner was an Anarchist.
He was also a Nihilist.
And an expert bomb-thrower.
No doubt of it—he had a great big bomb concealed about his person.
Would the secret service man please be careful, lest the bomb be thrown at the crowd.

Finally he managed to stammer out broken English that he had come as the President, merely to look him from a distance. Did he want to kill him? No, he wanted the foreigner flogged. He merely wanted to salute the President." The same fish that animated the thousands of others.

"Well, your whalers are a little different from me. I guess you're all right," said the officer, finally.

The foreigner looked relieved.

So also did some of the spectators, who had overheard the member of the committee express his fears to the

"Yes," he concluded, "foreigners expect our suspicious more than others. When they gather in crowds, they are liable to meet the President; but as a rule they are well behaved. It's only their eagerness to satisfy their curiosity that gets them into trouble. Suppose, however, they act just about the way we would if we were some foreign land and had a chance not a free glimpse of the ruler."

BRILLIANT SUNDAY BERMON - THE REV. JASON NOBLE BIERCE

Brooklyn, N. Y. In Puritan Church, the Evangelical Church Sunday the pastor, the Rev. Jason Noble Piercer preached on "The Compassion of Jesus." The text was from Luke 10:34: "And the Lord saw him and had compassion on him, and said to him, 'weep not.' Mr. Piercer said, 'I have taken up my subject this morning one of the most beautiful themes in the Bible. The Compassion of Jesus.' Many of us present in this congregation who are experiencing trials, suffering, or who have been called upon to bear some grievous burden of loss, ask his attention, here, 'Lord, have compassion on me.' And if there is any one here who would make more sure of God's love to him, let him discover that love as revealed in the compassion of Him who is our Lord and Saviour."

Now from personal conversation with some of you have questionings and uncertainties in your minds. If I do separate the question of Jesus' compassion from His miracles I think I do that. But how can I? where in the Gospels where His compassion is referred to it is in connection with some miracle. His is not an inactive compassion. He does it as so many of us do, allow His sympathy to vent itself in empty words. His great heart made demands for a great power, and the sight of our ever made Him exert Himself for our relief. Four times does St. Matthew and four times does St. Luke refer directly to Jesus' compassion and upon each occasion do we find Him exerting Himself for our relief.

There are some who discipline the miracles. Those they can through understood laws they hold; they hold in abeyance, and then they are converted into followers of the Master are these disciples.

There are those also who bent through Jesus were done every day. I am of this opinion. This approval, to all things, is said to have done. It is instance on record, if it is all that was said of Him is that Jesus said that through the word, and that through Nothing could tempt Him to make a show or win the crowd through the marvelous. But when He saw people in need or in sorrow or suffering, He did He ever turn them away? How quick was His response! Abstract truth is hard to grasp, and still harder to apply in practice; what people need to help them in the proper conduct of their lives is a concrete example of the truth. And that is just what Jesus was. He was truth personified. In His own person He showed us how to live, what to live for, and what are the results, or fruits, of the life He exemplified.

We are living in a wonderful age, are wonderful than we are capable of realizing. Scovory and invention and discovery and invention are creating unusual conditions of life for all people, and political changes and revolutions are changing the face of the world in every place in all directions. But the most wonderful of all the wonderful things that are taking place is the coming up of the whole world to the millennium of the Gospel. There is no time when it is not possible to preach the Gospel, and there are comparatively few in which it is not possible to listen. In China, the greatest of all countries in population, is one of the greatest, if not the very greatest, in the amount of capacity for spiritual achievement, is altogether open to the Gospel, and many millions of Chinese are waiting for spiritual authority to its proclamation. If so, this advertisement is not intended

First, only finest materials are used.

Second, all mixing is done by machinery, the up-to-date sanitary method.

Third, the loaves are enclosed in a dust

SUPPLEMENT TO South Jersey Republican

Saturday, Dec. 19, 1908.

Birthday Celebration.

Hammoncton's Citizen Lawyer, Andrew Jackson King, was honored on Tuesday last by his son, Charles Sumner King and family, of Camden, and Miss Catherine Brownell, of Philadelphia, and other friends meeting at his house and feasting with him upon turkey and other good things, among them a birthday cake ornamented with the date of the year of his birth, 1828, and the present, 1908, showing the elapse of 80 years between. He was affectionately remembered by several neighbors sending him beautiful bouquets and pots of flowers, with congratulations.
His grand daughter-in-law, Mrs. Eva King, wife of Arthur O. King, of Collingwood, entertained the company with her masterly singing and playing the piano. The day and evening were made a very happy one for all who were present, and especially for the one in whose honor the company gathered.
We confess to a feeling of surprise when we learned of Mr. King's age, for he bears his years well, appearing as well and vigorous as many men twenty years his junior.

A Pleasant Party.

A farewell surprise was given in honor of Miss Mabel Naylor, at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Gartman, corner Twelfth and Grand Streets, on Friday evening, Dec. 11th, 1908. Toasts were given in honor of the occasion by nearly all the guests. Everybody seemed to enjoy themselves very much. Games were played, and the older folks joined in, as well as the younger ones, which made the games pleasant. When the company left, at 12 o'clock, everybody looked happy. All are very sorry at Miss Naylor's leaving us, but hope to see her again in the near future.
The guests were as follows: Messrs.
O'Donnell, S. Godfrey, Wesley Vaughn,
Richard Morgan, Ward Simons, H.
Holland, John Birdall, Fred Croft,
George Mansmann, Mrs. O'Donnell,
Mrs. M. E. Bennett, Mrs. Burt Simons,
Mrs. H. Holland, Mrs. Law Conley,
Mrs. H. Shumberg, Misses Olive Simons, Emma Adams, Alvina Rothfus, Della Nicolai, Katharine Austin, Anna
Gartman, Ray Gartman.
