Manure tor Orchards.

Wood ashes are doubtless excellent for orchards, but instead of being put around the trees, they should be spread over the land. But where are the sahes to come from in this region? We have little or no wood, and, of course, little or no ashes. In our limited experience we have learned one thing about orchards as well as fruit trees of every kind that we have cultivated, and we believe the principle can be applied pretty much to everything that grows upon the arts of the sevente of the fifteenth century. In 1553 cork was used in France principally for soles, and in Germany wax stoppers were used by off. I may have consciousness while the seventeenth century.

Where the tree is indigenous the inhabitants apply cork to many purposes. Thus, in Spain for beechives and kitchen pails, pillows and window lights in Morocco for drinking vessels and plates, tubs and house conduits; in Portugal, roofs for houses, lining for garden walls, and fences for poultry yards; in Turkey, cabins for the cork-cutters and
